NEW SENATOR
DIRECTORY
Tennessee State Senate

Elections in the Senate

The state is divided into 33 senatorial districts and one senator is elected from each district to represent its citizens. In Tennessee, senators are elected to four-year terms with those from even-numbered districts elected in the same general election. Senators representing odd-numbered districts elected two years later. Thus, about half of the 33 senators are standing for election at the same time. Each senator represents roughly 180,000 Tennesseans.

Temporary Seating of the Senate

The Senate Chamber

Located in the northeast corner of the Capitol, this chamber measures 34 feet eight inches by 70 feet three inches, and is 40 feet high. The walls are ornamented with eight Ionic pilasters, three feet wide, and projecting six inches from the wall. They are crowned by a full entablature which is seven feet one and three-quarter inches high. The ceiling is divided into radiating panels, or lacunae. The room is lit by eleven large windows on the east and north sides. On the north, west and south sides is a gallery measuring ten feet nine inches in width. The railing to the visitors gallery is made of cast iron, and has a spear and shield pattern on it. The gallery is supported by twelve unfluted Ionic columns, three feet five and a half inches in circumference, by ten feet three inches in height.

The column shafts are of red variegated marble, the bases of black, and the capitals of white marble. The architraves were formerly of white and red marble. These marbles were principally obtained in Hawkins County, and are strikingly beautiful.

The gasolier has been electrified, but is original. In it are seen two of Tennessee's chief antebellum cash crops, corn and tobacco, as well as one of our former game animals, the elk.

Originally, the chamber had an eight-day marble-faced clock on the west wall. Two fireplaces helped heat the chamber. These were on the north and south walls. Their openings have been plugged, but are visible behind the modern press booths. The lobby of the Senate was formed by eight heavy sofas placed between the columns to the rear of the chamber. They were veneered with oak. The draperies were originally a fine silk and worsted damask, with 160 yards used in the chamber. The cornices above them were of gilded wood. The original window glass was made near Knoxville. The Speaker's dais was originally made of East Tennessee marble. However, it was removed in the 1950s in a remodeling of the chamber.
